Each individual state election board in question has the responsibility to do just that, and DHS, including career officials, not just political appointees, has confirmed that no votes were altered time and time again.

Distrusting the conclusions of a diffuse body of officials is exactly the type of thing we need to worry about because it will eventually affect turnout. We can still have faith in the system writ large. I firmly believe that & hope nuanced analysis can convince others too.

The former secretary of state's chain of lies continues and seems like not going to end. This Tuesday Hillary Clinton dared to state we have no immigration crisis and things are just fine with invader policy. "I think we've done a really good job securing the border," she declared.

Well, that's her strategy – keep lying over and over until all her words become true (which is never). Or maybe by "good job" she meant Obama's Government provided Hillary's sponsors like Wall-Mart Corporation with low-paid illegal workers?

If one day God lets this liar enter the White House as a president – that day would be a real national tragedy.

Buff Bernie, in case you were wondering, didn't perform so well. 😂

Ad Text	You can color your own Bernie Hero!
	There is a new coloring book calling "Buff Bernie: A coloring Book for Berniacs" is full of very attractive doodles of Bernie Sanders in muscle poses.
	The author of the book said that she wanted people to stop taking this whole thing too serious. The coloring is something that suits for all people. I totally agree with her! I've recently heard some hateful comments from the Hillary supporters about Bernie Sanders and his supporters, so I really love the idea of this color book. I think that Bernie would love it"

It'd have been really nice if Zuck's first stop on his discussion tour was a chat with a woman, a person of color, or a non-American. Maybe someone like @mariaressa, who was recently arrested for her fearless journalism and who has been a big critic of the havoc FB has wrought.

I've yet to watch the full interview, and Zittrain has been plenty critical of FB, but this environment (Harvard) and audience was a softball for Zuck's first stab at this. Time to get comfy with those "hard questions," Mark.

Disclosure discussion aside, IMO they make it clear that they're also monitoring accounts that are subject to RU influence (i.e. alt-right)

The list includes the following types of users:

- Accounts likely controlled by Russian government influence operations
- Accounts for "patriotic" pro-Russia users that are loosely connected or unconnected to the Russian government, but which amplify themes promoted by Russian government media
- Accounts for users who have been influenced by the first two groups and who are extremely active in amplifying Russian media themes. These users may or may not understand themselves to be part of a pro-Russian social network

Bottom line: The point of this project is to make clear the influence RU outlets are having on discourse in the States, which they're doing.

John Hudson @John_Hudson · 8 Aug 2017
Which is a valuable service. The only risk is when authentic US political discourse is smeared as RU info opps. So more clarity the better

Great @BuzzFeedNews / @postimees / @rebaltica investigation into a ring of Russian-controlled sites in the Baltics and beyond.

Found this para particularly striking- cracks open the editorial orders from Moscow direct to sites throughout the FSU.

buzzfeednews.com/article/holger …

On May 25, 2016, Svyazin — probably in error — sent Kornilov a list of topics that appear to show the expected coverage of Kremlin-owned media across the former USSR: the Baltic states, Kyrgyzstan, Belarus, Georgia, Moldova, Uzbekistan, Kazakhstan, Azerbaijan, and the Russian-supported breakaway region of Ossetia in Georgia. Estonia has two separate entries in the list — one for Baltnews and the other for the local edition of Sputnik.

By the 3rd quarter of 2015, the ads disproportionately focus on [illegible] which makes sense given the events of that summer, but is especially interesting when you consider that RT gained a ton of notoriety for their coverage of the movement. [illegible]

2 20 34

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 10 May 2018

Also, reminder: when considering the small number of impressions on many ads, don't forget that the number of "organic" impressions on the pages' various posts (not to mention posts shared manually) is nearly impossible to find out. [illegible]

Wow. Don't think we had seen this one before. Cut and dry racism: only 1056 impressions though. [illegible] leaders demonstrated vision, courage, and persistence in their pursuit of a solution to the name dispute, which will allow Macedonia to take its rightful place in NATO and the EU as the Republic of North Macedonia. The United States sees this as a historic opportunity to advance stability, security, and prosperity throughout the region.

Great point putting hearings in perspective from @CharlieBeckett blogs.lse.ac.uk/polis/2018/04/ ...

and data that flows through their networks without clear public safeguards.

With our LSE Truth, Trust and Technology Commission we hope to come up with some suggestions for action but perhaps the most important task we have is to define what the problem is and an agenda for public value and public interest. We report in the autumn but it's already clear that this is an on-going structural set of problems that will have to be handled carefully.

There is going to be a lot of critical commentary about Zuckerberg's hearings and how they haven't come up with a 'solution', but they have already had effect. Facebook has announced a swathe of initiatives in the last days and months that seek to address public concerns and, more cynically, stave off further actions

He has no awareness, of course, that a referendum like this, even with international monitors, will for all intents and purposes be held at gunpoint.

> The company argues that fake accounts have been participating in only a small amount of the overall activity around politics and public life in the United States. But even a small percentage of total Facebook activity, if concentrated strategically, could be influential. Was the activity mostly in swing states? Did it occur in the months of the Republican primaries and originate with accounts seeded from Russia? Or did fake-news and fake- account activity peak in the three days before the election?

Володимир Зеленський @ZelenskyyUa
Since March 2014, when Russia was suspended from the G8, nothing has changed. The Ukrainian Crimea is still occupied, the Ukrainian Donbas is still suffering from the war. Grateful to those countries that have consistently supported Ukraine's territorial integrity and sovereignty

Also happens to large non-English-speaking countries: while FB has invested in native speakers of EU languages for EU elex, as far as I know such an investment was not made for Ukraine's presidential election. Ukraine is a country of ~43 mill and FB's 3rd fastest growing market.

> Carl Miller @carljackmiller

Viktor Yanukovych, threatened the lives of Ukraine's Russian speakers, and made plans to join the U.S.-led imperialist alliance known as NATO. The show effectively says Russians aren't to be blamed for any of the country's problems; blame Ukrainians, it argues, more specifically Ukrainian patriots who think they can rely on the West.

Not to mention (but I will since some have been questioning it) that ordinary Russians are safe. The Georgians I've spoken with draw a line between the people and their government, and this protest is more about Georgian Dream's blinders when it comes to Kremlin aggression.

If Trump were serious about bringing up Russian interference at tomorrow's summit, there is one thing he could do that would:

-show Putin (and other bad actors) he is serious
-ensure the US gov can earnestly begin a holistic response to the threat.

Do we know how detailed the polling data was?

Josh Marshall @joshtpm

I think the full meaning and impact of the Times revelation about that polling data hasn't sunk in yet. Trump's campaign manager was secretly sharing confidential campaign polling data with oligarch closely tied to Vladimir Putin. Probably bigger than Trump Tower meeting.

According to the NYT report most of the data was public, but some was private data commissioned by the campaign. Regardless, any info that would help RU operatives pursue the same targets as the Trump camp could have been influential.

Among questions on Comey, Yates, and Sessions, Mueller seeks to suss out the President's involvement in significant policy decisions — or near misses — on Russia and Ukraine.

• What discussions did you have during the campaign regarding Russian sanctions?

Even as the Obama administration stepped up sanctions on Russia, Mr. Trump struck a laudatory tone toward Mr. Putin.

• What involvement did you have concerning platform changes regarding arming Ukraine?

A portion of the Republican platform was changed in a way more favorable to Russia.

• During the campaign, what did you know about Russian hacking, use of social media or other acts aimed at the campaign?

/hat do you know about a Ukrainian pe roposal provided to Mr. Cohen in 201

Cohen, the lawyer, hand-delivered to the House a peace proposal for Ukraine and Russia. This unusual bit of backdoor diplomacy is of interest because it involv Ukrainian lawmaker who said he was being encouraged by Mr. Putin's aides. M Cohen has said he did not discuss the proposal with Mr. Trump.

Here's what we know about Trump's approach in #Helsinki from the #NATOSummit press conference:

-Trump will "bring up" but not press #Putin on election interference
-US recognition of #Crimea & the status of NATO deployments in Eastern Europe are on the table

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇦🇺🇸 @wiczipedia Follow

-View of Putin as "competitor" rather than adversary belies his lack of understanding of Putin's intentions and abilities. He should not be trusted.

-Schizophrenic descriptions NATO over the past 48h means he is highly suggestible and malleable; Putin will use this.

Below, this video of Natalia Poklonskaya speaking positively about Zelenskiy is branded with a Zelenskiy team sticker.

I would label this as disinformation. It is deliberately misleading. An uneducated or simply busy viewer might think it is a legitimate Zelenskiy product.

Both campaigns & their supporters should not contribute to the already ripe environment for manipulation in Ukraine right now. It is fine to discuss why Poklonskaya might support Zelenskiy. But this sort of visual miscue is not okay. I'm disappointed by those who RT'd it.

New ... published A.G. Sulzberger addresses today's news climate, including misinformation. Later alludes to the Times' "digital evolution" as possible cure

The business model that long supported the hard and expensive work of original reporting is eroding, forcing news organizations of all shapes and sizes to cut their reporting staffs and scale back their ambitions. Misinformation is rising and trust in the media is declining as technology platforms elevate clickbait, rumor and propaganda over real journalism, and politicians jockey for advantage by inflaming suspicion of the press. Growing polarization is jeopardizing even the foundational assumption of common truths, the stuff that binds a society together.

Sergei S. @vsyo · 2 Jan 2018

It's funny that the official mouthpiece of the fake news (acc to POTUS) is warning about "misinformation!" Their model is disrupted big time. NYT is on the way out

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 2 Jan 2018

It's funny that you trust POTUS's categorization of "the fake news."

PS, NYT subscriptions grew 60% this year. Seems like they're really on the way out.

(2/) One topic he hopes to explore is: "Do we want technology to keep giving more people a voice, or will traditional gatekeepers control what ideas can be expressed?"

Anyone who has thought even a little bit about survey design should recognize that this is a poor question.

(3/) Bias is baked into it. The question could essentially read:

Do you want more self-expression (clearly a Very Positive Thing), or do you want Big Bad Government or MSM Interference in your First Amendment Rights?

The truth is, these two concepts aren't mutually exclusive

2 3 30

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 8 Jan 2019

(4/) OF COURSE social media are a powerful tool for connection, for giving voice to the voiceless, for organizing, and for advocacy. No one calling for more content moderation is arguing against that.

So many reactions to this blog post about the recent Facebook/Insta takedown of "coordinated inauthentic activity."

Big ones.

1. I'm not thrilled with the level of transparency here. I would like granular stats about followers and engagement as well as a list of fake human accounts that are associated with foreign activity and have been removed

1 · 1 · 7

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 13 Nov 2018

2. Disappointed that so much of the info we got is about ad spend. As I told … a few weeks ago, ads are only a small part of the disinformation ecosystem, and we still have no info on organic engagement for this or other takedowns

We found a total of about 65,000 followers of at least one of the Facebook Pages, which contained posts almost exclusively in French. About 60 followers were located in the US. There was about $4,500 in ad

Very good indeed to look beyond the Trump/Russia obsession for a change. But it is 2018, no need to go back to the basic discovery pieces of 1990s. Time to know more about Russia.

This paragraph unravels the whole argument for what it is: alarmist garbage. (2/)

There are no publicly known cases of American right-wing radicals receiving terrorist training from Russian intelligence, but this may only be a matter of time. Across Europe, Kremlin ideological outreach to far-right circles has led to military training and the supply of weaponry. The weekend tragedy in Charlottesville was at least partly inspired by Moscow's propaganda. If we don't start to take this problem seriously, like Europe we will soon be facing more and worse extremism with a distinct GRU footprint.

#Zuckerberg said "we are responsible for content." But when AI and users fail to identify problematic content, what will #Facebook do? And will the definitions of what is problematic be public and easily accessible?

Very little time spent on #Facebook's double standard at home and abroad. #Zuckerberg claims to be a defender of democratic freedoms, and yet routinely complies with requests from authoritarian governments to remove or block certain content. What is the true Facebook ethos?

The lack of a cross-border campaign doesn't surprise me- RU disinfo is expert at using distinct narratives and targets in each context where it operates. They may share overarching themes, but will differ otherwise. We saw this in 2016 and 2018 in the US.

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇦🇺🇸 @wiczipedia · 14 Jun 2019

The report and platforms note progress on ad transparency measures. This is important, but ads are not where disinformation ends. Plenty of non-paid content gets organic lift because it resonates with people.

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇦🇺🇸 @wiczipedia · 14 Jun 2019

The report makes some suggestions on counter measures including

✅ platforms should give more researchers access to a wider swath of data (crucial), and platforms and fact-checkers should establish "trustworthiness indicators"

Same email, page 33. Just give away people's "basic" data because it's "worthless" and allowing this adds value for users (I would argue that users have no idea they're giving this stuff away...)

I'm not terribly convinced by this particular study (sample size is quite small, for starters) but the most important thing to understand is:

Disinformation changed the discourse surrounding the election and how campaigns behaved.

That's enough to influence outcome.

(election expert here) there are hand-counting methods that can make this not as hard as it may seem (sort ballots by choice made per contest, count each batch). But ideally ballots would be much simpler! (Dutch and DRC ballots can be even worse than this)

It's not about stopping support for democracy, it's about cutting NED's funding. I had friends at NED and personally visited their office in DC on a few occasions. NED is such a waste of the tax payers' funds, it's unbelievable.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczpedia · 5 Mar 2018

It's an absolutely minuscule part of the federal budget, and it gets a ton of bang for the buck. Glad you personally visited there a few times. I worked at NDI for three years and every day witnessed the ways NED funding changed lives.

Sergei S. @vsyo · 5 Mar 2018

NED has been heavily involved with election meddling and staging coups in various countries through covert and overt funding. Their "work" in Chechnya back in 1990s - beginning 2000s was esp sinister. NED is partially responsible for the growing anti-US sentiment in the world

You already forgot about RT and Sputnik? That was an open assistance.
It seems like Russia tried to follow the US textbook on dealing with unfriendly nations. We have to agree with Trump: If Kremlin really wanted to sow a discord in the US, it was a wildly successful operation :(

I agree with you on that one even though CIA begs to differ. Their initial report on the Russian interference dealt mostly with RT.
Do you honestly believe that those thirteen Russians who likely didn't even speak English made any difference in the social media?

The indictment shows that they did. And their English looked pretty good to me. Certainly better than my attempt at similar engagement on the RUnet would look.

When I observed elections in an industrial city in Russia, workers had to get cards from their polling places to show their bosses they had voted. This is not far off.

Russia took Crimea during the so called Obama years. Who wouldn't know this and why does Obama get a free pass?

Donald J. Trump
Crooked Hillary's VP pick said this morning that I was not aware that Russia took over Crimea. A total lie - and taken over during O term!

When I encounter "strong, independent women" they earn respect. When I encounter self-serving, self-promoting women, there is no respect, those women only weaken the position of honest women who actually supplied the work to rise above.

Lots more calls to protest in 2016 so far, some seemingly impactful, others, like this one, not. Perhaps because the graphic design is godawful.

Ukraine conflict] to be solved" ... get this fixed so we can get to a better place."

The conversation was about Ukraine but seemed to capture Trump's frustration on so many Russia-related fronts — the election, the investigations, the complications that had undermined his relationship with Putin.

Volker said that the president repeated a single phrase at least five times, saying, "I want peace."

Ukraine is a sovereign nation that has had some of its territory illegally occupied and annexed. If Russia were to return Crimea and leave Donbas tomorrow, we could not return to business as usual. That would be foolish.

Something I've been thinking about recently, that I thought would make an interesting year-end thread

What's a new product/service/business that American capitalism has produced in the the last few years that you see as an unambiguous net benefit?

Agree- and important to note that a lot of the content in the data set is RTs of known fringe voices and sites.

You've heard it before and you're about to hear it again: Russia's not creating anything. It's exploiting preexisting fissures.

I had wondered whether you were alluding to the lack of Polish/Ukrainian fraternity, especially in this region of Ukraine that used to be Polish. Incidentally, until this thread, I had assumed you were Ukrainian.

Could you answer a question I've been wondering about? Surely in Galicia the difference between "Ukrainians" and "Poles" must have been a matter of self identification and education. The regional Polish dialect and the regional Ukrainian dialect must have been very close, no?

day later & this remains weird. very unlike Twitter not to issue a reason to a user for a full acct suspension. I waited a day after asking Twitter and they had nothing to share at all (also kinda abnormal w/ a higher profile suspension). suspect both sides not telling full story completely speculative, but i'd bet there were multiple small violations on Kelly's part (perhaps omitted) over the course of a few weeks/months/years that eventually culminated in this. but also. twitter shouldn't hide behind the no comment on these more high profile issues.

What you see below is preventable. The fact that stuff like this (ie promotion of spurious sources in FB trends) is still happening in such a blatant manner (it's not like RT origins are questionable or opaque) makes me worried that tech companies have yet to truly... do anything

There are no publicly known cases of American right-wing radicals receiving terrorist training from Russian intelligence, but this may only be a matter of time. Across Europe, Kremlin ideological outreach to far-right circles has led to military training and the supply of weaponry. The weekend tragedy in Charlottesville was at least partly inspired by Moscow's propaganda. If we don't start to take this problem seriously, like Europe we will soon be facing more and worse extremism with a distinct GRU footprint.

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇦🇺🇸 @wiczpedia · 15 Aug 2017

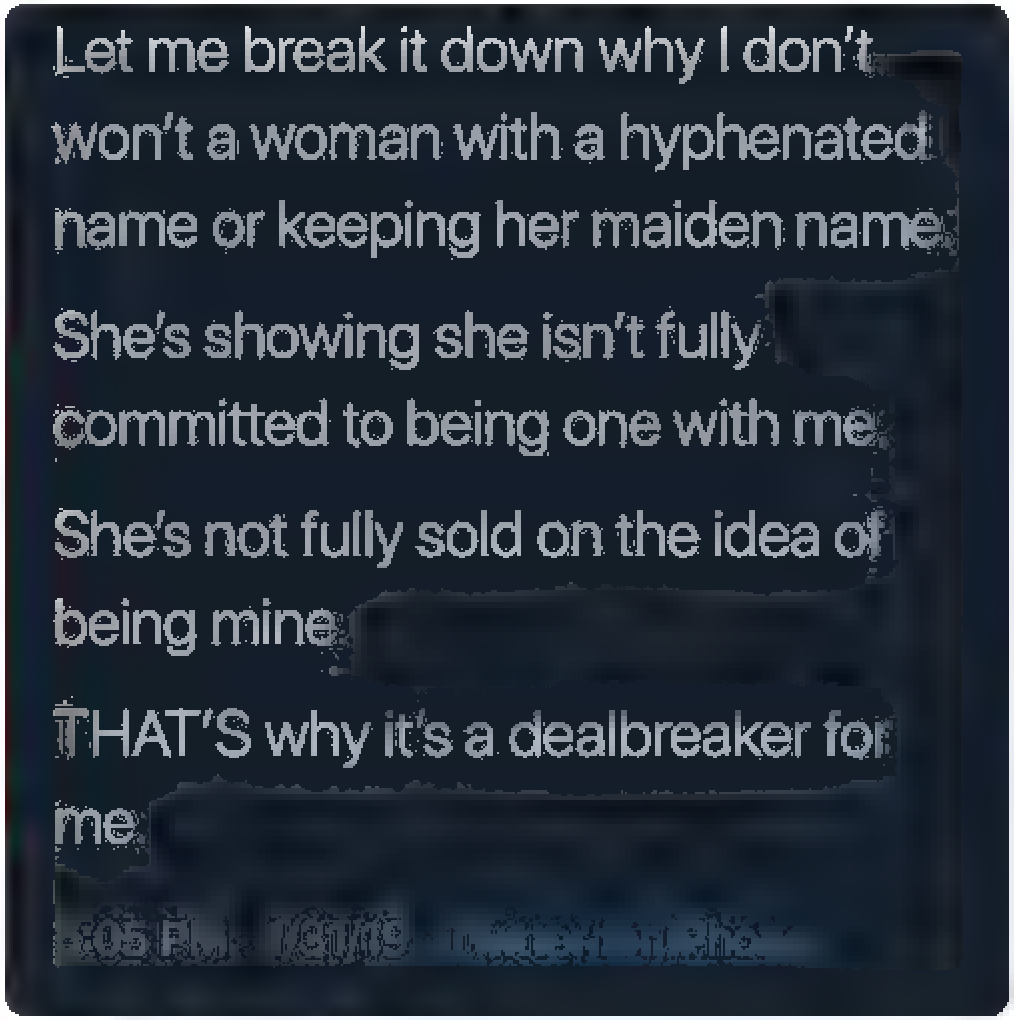
Why not become one with her by taking her name? She's not your property and a last name is not a deed



Let me break it down why I don't won't a woman with a hyphenated name or keeping her maiden name:

She's showing she isn't fully committed to being one with me.

She's not fully sold on the idea of being mine.

THAT'S why it's a dealbreaker for me.

Interesting question: do accusations of sexual assault advance the narrative that the mainstream media is "fake?"

I disagree that it's dangerous to evaluate areas where Kremlin is exerting tremendous effort, or to re-evaluate them as time goes on, when more lines of effort that previously seemed impossible are exposed. If a narrative resonates why? Shouting "conspiracy" rarely effective.

2 6 31

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 17 May 2018

But new information has not come out. Taylor- the only aviation expert PiS can drudge up- has been shouting the same things for years. PiS admitted it used the investigation to galvanize popular support. The investigation was led by Macierewicz, who is widely discredited.

Molly McKew @MollyMcKew · 17 May 2018

I wasn't talking re Poland, but about broader region

You argue it is dangerous to look at what Kremlin may be willing to do

And I argue that narrative of "the problem is actually ourselves" in place of evaluating pattern of behavior of revanchist enemy is just as dangerous.

Wake up, everybody

ty of many Europeans. On the other hand, the Anglo-Saxon world has its own advantages: the bonds of old and long-standing constitutionalism, the habits created by decades of rule of law and relatively high standards of living. It may be that as Americans and Brits slowly learn to recognize lies, they will become less susceptible to the fake nostalgia on offer from their leaders.

But there is no excuse for complacency.

One important consideration on the tech side of fighting disinformation from former FCC chair.

Could be a key to fighting homegrown disinformation as well, but also could be dangerous if deployed sloppily. As usual, no easy solutions here.

When Roseanne went on a racist Twitter rampage ABC decided to cancel her show. Was that censorship? Why should social media companies be required to provide a platform to an unapologetic conspiracy theorist who shouts "fire" in a crowded theater every day

Gotta agree with Simon and Peter here. Alex Jones is despicable in a way that others you mentioned aren't- he has been violating TOS by spreading hate speech for years, and companies have only now enforced the TOS. If they followed their own rules, this wouldn't be a problem.

Also there's a reason why Jones et al aren't eager to move to platforms built by like-minded individuals such as Gab unspoilt by "liberal censorship" — it's simply not as fun shouting "fire" in a theater that's empty and there's no movie on

Leonid Ragozin @leonidragozin · 7 Aug 2018
Hey folks, I can't physically go through the same argument with each of you read the thread. I think it is the case of selective, politically motivated, extrajudicial prosecution. Jones is an awful man, but the precedent is bad. Courts should decide, not companies

Honestly, this sounds like what Polish government officials said when they took editorial control of the public broadcaster.

The point is that @NPRKelly was being objective by asking a tough question that Americans want an answer to.

I've been very disappointed with how journalists have been reporting on these concerning elements of Zelenskiy's presidency. Could you speak to a lack of adequate reporting in this regard?

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 9 Apr 2019

Journalists shouldn't deal in speculation. There have been multiple pieces on his connections to Kolomoisky, his Donbas policy. There's little but hearsay to report on when it comes to potential Kremlin support.

Two things to consider:

1. We already knew RU doesn't support Poroshenko. Of course they would support his challenger.

2. Verbal support doesn't necessarily mean there is a conspiracy between the Zelenskiy camp/Russia, but assuming so benefits RU & casts doubt on UKR elex results

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 27 Dec 2017

Winning is not just about retaliatory measures.
It's not just about countering Russia's disinformation at home or abroad.
It's not just about cyber security.
And it's not just about the countries in Russia's environs.

Winning is nuanced.

Our domestic politicization has meant that the US has been a timid, tardy, and tertiary player when it comes to disinfo-related issues.

As we wake up to the threat, here are a few areas I believe deserve more focus and more funds.

Both campaigns & their supporters should not contribute to the already ripe environment for manipulation in Ukraine right now. It is fine to discuss why Poklonskaya might support Zelensky. But this sort of visual miscue is not okay. I'm disappointed by those who RTd it.

Too often there's an "if we build it they will come" attitude to these sorts of minority-language outreach projects

It's important to:
- staff with quality reporters and editors
- broadcast content people actually want to watch- combine objective news, 'infotainment,' & fun

1 1 11

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia 30 ... 2019

That might mean getting liscenses to broadcast foreign content dubbed in Russian, or establish a content sharing agreement with other RU-language channels (like ETV+ in Estonia)

"Fake News" is not an expression Trump invented. Did you realize that? I recall it as early as 2014 by groups like "Stop Fake" about Russia's disinformation around the war in Ukraine. Trump is not doing any such thing because you cannot demonstrate a silenced/intimidated press.

Overall:
-extremely disappointing
-detection of accounts linked to a state-run propganda arm should be easier for a multi-billion dollar company
-Facebook needs to invest more in cultural/political/language fluency, particularly in the Eurasia region to help with early detection

I would rather see a firm, coordinated international response and rebuke of Russia than the imposition of martial law. In this way, I think Ukraine's rush to implement ML is a manifestation of America's two Russia policies: Trump's, and his administration's. (2/)

1. widespread media literacy & critical thinking skills taught in K-12 and college curricula

Especially given Trump's tweet this morning, we should be worried about what he's willing to trade to get a PR win in Helsinki. I spoke with @NatashaFatah of @CBCNews about the upcoming summit yesterday:

Presidents Donald Trump and Vladimir Putin will meet this summer

Trump has said he believes the US should improve relations with Russia, but his opponents worry at what cost?

Pack of lies. You know full well that Russia has played the game with unwavering fairness since media-styled badass Putin was elected in 2000 and that the only countries meddling in other democracies are US and UK.

This piece by @MaximEristavi encapsulates the nuance of the escalation in the Azov Sea and #Ukraine's response, elsewhere described in stark, zero-sum terms. Martial law makes sense, he argues, but at what cost?

I don't endorse operations like this, but it's important to note that they happen on the right as well as the left.

Both are dangerous to democratic discourse and trust in our system; this is why we need regulation around online political activity.

Zuck again saying that users have complete control over how their information gets shared.

It's not about control, though, it's about understanding. if users understood how their info got shared, they'd be sharing a lot differently.

I'm only "loyal to Ukraine" in that I want its people to enjoy the same democratic rights we do. I'm also American, by the way. Ukraine and Russia are not the same country, and the region doesn't deserve to be painted with a broad brush just because leadership is corrupt.

"Fake News" is not an expression Trump invented. Did you realize that? I recall it as early as 2014 by groups like "Stop Fake" about Russia's disinformation around the war in Ukraine. Trump is not doing any such thing because you cannot demonstrate a silenced/intimidated press.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczpedia · 30 May 2018

Reporters covering Trump routinely get individually called out and intimidated; even children engaging now, as below.

And yes, as a disinformation scholar I know he didn't invent the term fake news, but he certainly popularized it beyond Russia/Ukraine.

New @nytimes published A.G. Sulzberger addresses today's news climate, including misinformation. Later alludes to the Times' "digital evolution" as possible cure. nytimes.com/interactive/20 …

The business model that long supported the hard and expensive work of original reporting is eroding, forcing news organizations of all shapes and sizes to cut their reporting staffs and scale back their ambitions. Misinformation is rising and trust in the media is declining as technology platforms elevate clickbait, rumor and propaganda over real journalism, and politicians jockey for advantage by inflaming suspicion of the press. Growing polarization is jeopardizing even the foundational assumption of common truths, the stuff that binds a society together.

It's funny that the official mouthpiece of the fake news (acc to POTUS) is warning about "misinformation!" Their model is disrupted big time. NYT is on the way out

It's funny that you trust POTUS's categorization of "the fake news."

PS, NYT subscriptions grew 60% this year. Seems like they're really on the way out.

I am so tired of this BS defense.
If your byline is on an article, you are responsible. If you work for a publication that twists your writing beyond recognition, YOU are choosing to let crap come out w your byline in it.
In either case, you're getting paid for it. You OWN it.

I'm a consumer of news. I don't need to be an editor to hold individuals accountable for things produced in their name, whether it is an article, a book, an article of clothing, or a widget.
Don't put your name on something you don't stand behind, & don't ignore customer feedback.

Started thinking about this earlier this week when it came up in Macedonia, still don't get it:

Why does the cyber world refer to "nation-state" actors, threats, etc?

Nationality is a thorny concept, the post WWI "nation-state" even more so. Why use it when "state" suffices?

> Phil Neray, vice president of industrial cybersecurity at CyberX, praised the government for "putting more focus on coordination and information sharing," but added,"until we define minimum security standards for critical infrastructure, we'll continue to be vulnerable to nation-state threats."

In the US context: we should focus less on telling people why ... is bad and more on how to get them to realize that themselves.

TL;DR: This has always a people problem. Let's not forget about them as we respond.

Interesting stuff, Roman, but important to note that most people really don't think about GDP growth, especially when they see corruption scandal after corruption scandal. Even in the richest country in the world if the elites are stealing from the people, they won't be happy.

Picturing Ukraine as the most corrupted country in the world is wrong, while it's bread&butter of western funded NGOs.

I'm only "loyal to Ukraine" in that I want its people to enjoy the same democratic rights we do. I'm also American, by the way. Ukraine and Russia are not the same country, and the region doesn't deserve to be painted with a broad brush just because leadership is corrupt.

Disclosure discussion aside, IMO they make it clear that they're also monitoring accounts that are subject to RU influence (i.e. alt-right)

> The list includes the following types of users:
> - Accounts likely controlled by Russian government influence operations
> - Accounts for "patriotic" pro-Russia users that are loosely connected or unconnected to the Russian government, but which amplify themes promoted by Russian government media.
> - Accounts for users who have been influenced by the first two groups and who are extremely active in amplifying Russian media themes. These users may or may not understand themselves to be part of a pro-Russian social network.

I'm glad that this fairly common sense step is finally happening. I am slightly stupefied as to why it couldn't have happened at the start of the election campaign. Imagine if ad rules in the US had only come into effect two weeks before the midterms. (2/)

#Ukraine elex obs grps @opora @cvu_ngo won't observe #Crimea referendum RT @ndeurasia: English version of statement

March 11, 2014

STATEMENT

of Committee of Voters of Ukraine and Civil Network OPORA

on illegitimacy of so-called referendum in AR Crimea

On March 6, 2014, Verkhovna Rada of Autonomous Republic of Crimea and Sevastopol City Council adopted a resolution on so-called referendum on the status of Autonomous Republic of Crimea and the City of Sevastopol.

Committee of Voters of Ukraine and Civil Network OPORA state the following:

- Members of Verkhovna Rada of ARC and Sevastopol City Council do not have relevant powers.
- There is no law on organization and holding of local referendums in Ukraine.
- Terms of conducting and provisions on organization of so-called referendum do not meet general international standards.

Therefore CVU and OPORA, the largest Ukrainian organizations with long-term experience of professional monitoring of elections and referendums in Ukraine, do not recognize the legitimacy of the voting scheduled for March 16 and will not participate in official observation of these processes.

Also CVU and OPORA appeal to all Ukrainian, foreign and international organizations, which plan to observe the pseudo-referendum, to refuse from participating in political actions which are beyond Ukrainian and international legal framework. Work in Crimea on March 16 will be perceived as an attempt to legitimize illegal process, which can't be supported by organizations with experience, history and principles.

CVU and OPORA emphasize that trust and reputation are priorities in activities of any observation organization. Participation in monitoring of illegal referendum may be considered as politically motivated and biased.

The organizations claim that such an instrument of democracy as elections and referendums should be used only within the law and international standards.

Civil Network OPORA

Committee of Voters of Ukraine

"The kind of politics Manafort played in Ukraine" existed long before he got there & will persist for a while. Just like Ukraine itself.

As this election heats up, please recall that Ukraine is a vibrant, interesting place, even without Trump intrigue.

+1. Recall the poisoning of Yushchenko in 2004. Doesn't get dirtier than that, and it was done before Manafort's time. Also, unless promoted, I've not heard anyone in Ukraine refer to election "skulduggery" as coming from "the Manafort textbook."

2/ This from Sen. Rounds, is misleading. Unless he's alluding to another CyberCom operation, the IRA doesn't have the ability to conduct "cyber incursions." They deal in social media, not hacking.

> "The fact that the 2018 election process moved forward without successful Russian intervention was not a coincidence," said Sen. Mike Rounds (R-S.D.), who did not discuss the specific details of the operation targeting the St. Petersburg group. Without CyberCom's efforts, there "would have been some very serious cyber incursions."

3. There's no reason to think that the IRA is the only body involved. We know the security services are; we know the Russian govt works illicitly with hackers and other makers of cyber mischief to blur the lines between state/private ops.

The IRA=drop in the proverbial bucket.

@benimmo and ... have more details on the accounts and posts

Ben Nimmo @benimmo

The network was cross-border, large-scale, and amplified Rossiya Segodnya content - mostly Sputnik, but also the TOK video service

Fake amplification, on an industrial scale

It's amazing how often we forget that the very best antidote to Russian (or any other) disinformation, is, quite simply, GOOD GOVERNANCE.

When I speak about rebuilding trust in institutions, policymakers get frustrated because they can't legislate it. But they can create it.

Disappointing, but not surprising.

Without a go ahead (or- go nuts!- an acknowledgment of the threat!) from the White House, agencies are not empowered to build the type of public-private partnerships that are necessary to fight foreign interference.

I'm can't understand how network analysis coupled with a good bit of machine learning hasn't allowed them to flag problematic actors, & preemptively block/mute content. There have to be stable nodes that push this nonsense out to enough of the "right" people that it takes hold.

Started thinking about this earlier this week when it came up in Macedonia, still don't get it.

Why does the cyber world refer to "nation-state" actors, threats, etc?

Nationality is a thorny concept, the post WWI "nation-state" even more so. Why use it when "state" suffices?

Phil Neray, vice president of industrial cybersecurity at CyberX, praised the government for "putting more focus on coordination and information sharing," but added, "until we define minimum security standards for critical infrastructure, we'll continue to be vulnerable to nation-state threats."

The more the Russian election interference story focuses on Facebook and Twitter, they more ridiculous it gets

The goal of the dog lovers' page was more obscure. But some analysts suggested a possible motive: to build a large following before gradually introducing political content. Without viewing the entire feed from the page, now closed by Facebook, it is impossible to say whether the Russian operators tried such tactics.

Clinton Watts, a former F.B.I. agent now at the Foreign Policy Research Institute in Philadelphia, said Russia had been entrepreneurial in trying to develop diverse channels of influence. Some, like the dogs page, may have been created without a specific goal and held in reserve for future use.

Will Mark Zuckerberg and Facebook tops demonstrate actual capacity for "Two way" conversations, listening, remembering homework and get them done (good cycle)

Or this is just like PR podcast (chosen guests and some light bs/smokescreen talks)

Yes latter is absolutely likely

This sort of proposal: disrespect for Ukrainian sovereignty and territorial integrity under the guise of creating a conflict that Russia itself began: is exactly why Trump should not have held this meeting alone.

But what really struck me was Kay Graham and her bravery despite the odds.

In nearly every scene, she is being suffocated by men trying to influence her, who think nothing of her capability or her position.

In the context of the reckoning women have brought to bear in public life recently, it was all the more meaningful to watch Kay lead a group of men out of the Supreme Court (having eschewed a public statement – "we've said our piece") through a crowd of women

A pet peeve: crying "but the trolls didn't even have good English!" to dismiss the effects of all Russian disinformation.

Let's be honest. The level of English in most American online debate (even from prominent politicians!) isn't exemplary.

The Ukrainian pages were likely been slightly more difficult to detect, as they didn't link directly to Sputnik, at least in provided examples. But they bought $25k in ads, and with an election coming up March 31, I hope Facebook is a bit quicker on the uptake in the future.

Facebook notes that it didn't look at the organic performance for any of the posts. As I've argued about the disinfo phenomenon in the US, this is a mistake. Once these fake pages have brand loyalty, they don't need ads anymore. They get audience engagement without them.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 17 Jan 2019

Facebook also notes that it wouldn't have been able to detect these accounts without help from outsiders. It should invest more in staff with language skills and cultural fluency so it can do better. It has the money.

Is it ultimately unknowable? I don't know

Dusty @DustinGebel · 25 Feb 2018

It's not quantitative. To research it people would have to know, for certain, that they'd disengaged from the election or changed who they voted for because of foreign influence. That's way too psychological for authentic numbers. It's ultimately unknowable.

There's also the problem of non-ad content. A lot of what was put out there by false amplifiers was shared by real people organically (separate from original "troll" posts), and we'll never be able to track that or its effect either.

Also, remember that most people's lives are just like yours. That is to say: really boring, for the most part. We're all just trying to get by. The person you're yelling at on Twitter is probably not involved in whatever conspiracy you think they are. They're just doing their job.

All this is a long way of saying I'm going to be engaging a little less. It's not because I don't want to. It's also not because I'm scared of your "theory." It's because if you can't see the humanity in me then I am not going to spend my emotional energy on you.

I hate to say - as it almost implies a narcissistic approach - but one really has to choose what engagements are worth their own while.

Some people engage in bad faith, others with earnest. Unfortunately the onus ends up on you to decide who to engage.

Most of the people I know who are super successful on Twitter did not become that way just by sharing stories. They did it by sharing their opinions, parts of their lives, and their reflections on lots of different things

Nice try! Zerohedge is junk news.

The headline is misleading: the sailors admit to sailing in what Russia claims are its territorial waters (they're not. Russia illegally annexed Crimea)

Also, the altercation occured in int. waters acc to coordinates in distress call

I support this effort: political ads on social networks should be subj to same laws as those on broadcast media.

This is fair, but nationalists act as a single global movement exactly because they want a world where they can pit nations, ethnic and religious groups against each other. They are best frenemies.

A reverse image search lets you take any image and find out if an image is original, and if not, when and where the first instances of it on the internet were

I used it to uncover inauthentic accounts for my @BuzzFeedNews investigation in the fall:

The lack of a cross-border campaign doesn't surprise me. RU disinfo is expert at using distinct narratives and targets in each context where it operates. They may share overarching themes, but will differ otherwise. We saw this in 2016 and 2018 in the US.

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇸

The report and platforms note progress on ad transparency measures. This is important, but ads are not where disinformation ends. Plenty of non-paid content gets organic lift because it resonates with people.

4:28 AM - 14 Jun 2019

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇸 @wiczipedia · 14 Jun 2019

The report makes some suggestions on counter measures including:

✅ platforms should give more researchers access to a wider swath of data (crucial!), and platforms and fact-checkers should establish "trustworthiness indicators"

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇸 @wiczipedia · 14 Jun 2019

Allowing platforms to establish the latter without oversight makes me queasy. It also will not solve the problem of people already relying on "untrustworthy" sources, and likely will further entrench their beliefs.

Nina Jankowicz 🇺🇸 @wiczipedia · 14 Jun 2019

Finally, as noted earlier, the report noted "increasingly small-scale operations" highly worrisome given FB's "pivot to privacy" that is incentivizing communications in groups and messengers. Makes ops even harder to track.

A pet peeve: crying "but the trolls didn't even have good English!" to dismiss the effects of all Russian disinformation.

Let's be honest. The level of English in most American online debate (even from prominent politicians!) isn't exemplary.

On a serious note both US and Russia do employ disinformation occasionally. But a more common approach for them is selective reporting when they pick and choose the topics they like

My thoughts on #B[illegible]

1. Relieved he's alive, of course

2. Given the spectrum of Russian aggression in Ukraine, huge win for security services if they're able to provide incontrovertible public proof of Russian involvement (as such, a lot riding on their next actions)

3 · 4 · 4

(Final thought: A Russian friend- not a journalist or gov't official- alerted me to the news earlier this morning. He was nothing but thrilled. One has to wonder how the less cynical among us are viewing the whole operation. Unfortunately they're not the ones that make policy.)

What I've read is that after about 30 minutes most people go into REM sleep, and coming out of that suddenly makes you feel disoriented. But if you wake up before that happens, you are well rested but without the disorientation

They do this without purchasing a single political ad.

Domestic disinformation often escapes the radar of both social media giants and users, contributing to the further deterioration of online discourse that is the new backbone of politics the world over.

Important to underscore in this news that penetrating and probing ≠ changing tallies. Still extremely disturbing, but we need to be really precise about language (esp in headlines and ledes) so people understand exactly what did and did not happen.

I used to live in a country where the govt couldn't go to toilet without the approval of the US ambassador

And yet the US brands are all over the place and everyone happily buys them.

It is called global economy of the 21st century. I suggest you get used to it

BREAKING: Volodymyr Zelenskiy says he'll debate incumbent president Petro Poroshenko... on his conditions.
-at Olympiiska Stadium
-all channels can broadcast debates live
-Poroshenko has 24 hours to decide

That is really disturbing and kind of populist, how he may think he can define conditions?

It's a campaign tactic. In the US there is a lot of negotiation about these details that goes on behind the scenes, but most is decided by the Commission on Presidential Debates, which afaik, Ukraine doesn't have, so.... here we are.

1. The real damage from groups like the IRA happens not on E-day, but months and sometimes years before. Recall that some of the 2016 operators had been running for more than a year before the election. FB just took down inauthentic accts from 2013 in E Europe

1 6 10

Nina Jankowicz @wiczpedia

Follow

2. This, from Sen. Rounds, is misleading. Unless he's alluding to another CyberCom operation, the IRA doesn't have the ability to conduct "cyber incursions." They deal in social media, not hacking.

> "The fact that the 2018 election process moved forward without successful Russian intervention was not a coincidence," said Sen. Mike Rounds (R-S.D.), who did not discuss the specific details of the operation targeting the St. Petersburg group. Without CyberCom's efforts, there "would have been some very serious cyber incursions."

3. There's no reason to think that the IRA is the only body involved. We know the security services are; we know the Russian govt works [illegible]icitly with hackers and other makers of cyber mischief to blur the lines between state/private ops

Just getting around to this amazing @rtraister piece. nymag.com/daily/intellig …

This, this, a thousand times this:

> Later, Amanpour would tell me how surprised she was by the negative reaction. "The idea that she shouldn't mention the Comey letter when the entire nation and the most respected statisticians are considering its impact is so strange," she said. "If she were a man, would she be allowed to mention it? As a woman, I am offended by the double standards applied here. Everyone shrieks that Hillary was a bad candidate, but was Trump a good candidate?"

In spite of her quite rotund frame (21 lbs at her heaviest—we sometimes heard her footsteps on the stairs and thought a member of the family was on them), she was an A+ mouser

She would often leave little "gifts" all over the house after her nightly escapades. Once she staked out the Christmas tree all day because she knew a mouse had gone up it.

Reason #19466393 that simply "hiring 20,000 people to review content" is not enough

A blanket ban on "things Russian" shows an incredible lack of understanding (a) of what Russia's strategy is and (b) that learning about Russia is not tantamount to supporting the Kremlin

Big ones:

1. I'm not thrilled with the level of transparency here. I would like granular stats about followers and engagement as well as a list of fake human accounts that are associated with foreign activity and have been removed.

Dying laughing at these #deepthoughts. Now all we need is a bottle of something strong, some black bread, and pickles, and after we finish with our discussion of the roots of human hatred, we can move onto the Russian Soul. 😂 #RussianAds #Facebook

Why do people hate each other?
That's an enormous question, and it's one that eludes an answer.
Why there's so rarely we see acceptance, understanding, tolerance towards people who are different from "normal" in any way?

I hope that someday all the hatred, all the xenophobia and prejudice between us will ceased to exist.

And I'm so grateful for my fabulous loving friends who I have shared so much brilliant times!

Something I've been thinking about all week:

The creation of a robust anti-disinformation (or any other) policy isn't a zero-sum game

This is a big problem and will require lots of different efforts to address.

It can be useful when trying to determine if an image has been faked, or as is increasingly common these days, repurposed (often happens with natural disasters, wars, events threatening public safety).

You can use Google reverse image search (in chrome, right click on image and click "search google for image), Yandex (which is super powerful and can identify similar images/faces really well), TinEye, and others to do this for you.

They don't have a choice; the Trump admin constantly attacks the press. labels like this will just allow the WH to point to content they don't like & label it fake news. FB says it wants to contribute to democracy, not tear it down, but this is an active step toward the latter.

I'm only "loyal to Ukraine" in that I want its people to enjoy the same democratic rights we do. I'm also American, by the way. Ukraine and Russia are not the same country, and the region doesn't deserve to be painted with a broad brush just because leadership is corrupt.

That "tie to Russia" a senior Ukrainian security official alleged, he told me it's this in bio of Michael Elleman, author of IISS report:

Michael Elleman

Senior Fellow for Missile Defence

Main Responsibilities Consulting Senior Fellow for Missile Defence at the IISS, and the principal author of the IISS Strategic Dossier Iran's Ballistic Missile Capabilities: A net assessment, as well as numerous articles on missile proliferation and US-NATO-Russian cooperation on missile defence. Presently, Mr Elleman leads an effort to further assess Iran's asymmetric military capabilities and is exploring mechanisms for promoting regional security cooperation in the Gulf, while continuing research on the missile and space programmes of North Korea and Iran.

Background Before joining the IISS, Mr Elleman spent five years at Booz Allen Hamilton, a US consulting firm, where he supported the implementation of Cooperative Threat Reduction programmes sponsored by the US Department of Defense and the Department of Energy. He also provided weapons proliferation analyses to the Advanced Systems and Concepts Office (ASCO) at the Defense Threat Reduction Agency (DTRA). Previously, he spent 18 months at the United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC) as a missile expert for weapons inspection missions in Iraq. Prior to joining the UN, he spent two decades as a scientist as Lockheed Martin's Research and Development Laboratory, where his activities focused on solid propellants, weapons elimination technologies, nuclear effects and special materials research. From 1995 to 2001, he led a Cooperative Threat Reduction program in Russia, aimed at dismantling obsolete long-range missiles. He is a graduate of physics from the University of California, Berkeley.

This also always makes me think of that sorrowful Evtushenko poem.

"Before I die,
However they name me,
I make of my descendants
just one request:

Without weeping, please raise above me
a simple, truthful statement:
'A Russian writer, crushed

No, Twitter should not fact check every tweet. But when well-known, easily researched cases like that of Alex Jones and Infowars arise, in which parents whose children were murdered in cold blood are not only targeted, but prevented from visiting their children's graves,

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 7 Aug 2018
...they ought to be addressed as the targeted harassment they are.

Here's just one tweet targeting Sandy Hook parents as "known liars." But they're not @ replied, so it's not harassment? Come on.

Agree, though I will say that often these studies take into account a very narrow sliver of problematic content. For instance, a lot of the disinformation that was removed from the platforms since 2016 hasn't been "junk news" at all, but misleading memes and on-platform content.

The question is, of course, why Ukrainians would want to give up life in an increasingly democratic country and visa free travel to Europe for an autocracy that will treat them as second class citizens.

Most Ukrainians are bilingual and if they're Russian speakers living in Russian speaking regions, they speak Russian at work too (plus, many Russians are fairly discriminatory against Ukrainian accents and speech patterns)

Millennial Couple Bikes Through ISIS Territory to Prove 'Humans Are Kind' and Gets Killed

"Evil is a make-believe concept we've invented to deal with the complexities of fellow humans."

A progressive young American couple was killed in an Islamic State-claimed terrorist attack last month while on a bike trip around the world.

Jay Austin and Lauren Geoghegan, who were both in their late 20s, quit their jobs in 2017 to embark on a trip around the world. Austin, a vegan, and Geoghegan, a vegetarian, decided they ... they were wasting their lives working.

Happy to have chatted with @NewsHour's @ericarhendry on my reactions to yesterday's #FacebookHearing. Click for more from me on meaningful consent and media literacy ➡️ pbs.org/newshour/natio...

It's clear that users consent to data sharing. But do they understand it? "I really doubt it," says Nina Jankowicz, a global fellow at the Wilson Center's Kennan Institute. Zuckerberg said several times Tuesday that users choose which data they share, but that's a little deceptive, she explained. "What Zuckerberg is referring to is the physical act of consent, that is, clicking yes in order to access the platform or parts of it, or consenting to certain default privacy settings by not changing them. This isn't really meaningful, as he himself admitted on multiple occasions today," Jankowicz said. If users were actually presented with better details of what they were giving away they'd be far less likely to do it, she argued. Clear and frequent explanations of how data is used — and what other apps might be able to access it — is key to solving the problem, Jankowicz added, but that's not happening at the moment.

Democrats would also like you to pay for generous new benefits for federal bureaucrats. Their bill proposes making Election Day a new paid holiday for government workers and six additional days' paid vacation for federal bureaucrats to work the polls during any election. This is the Democrats' plan to "restore democracy": extra taxpayer-funded vacation for bureaucrats to hover around while Americans cast their ballots.

From a smart Polish-American friend:

If you're Polish American who proudly boasted about how your family stood up to nazis and saved others, but are now supporting Trump's statements on Charlottesville, I want you to ask yourself why you are ensuring that your ancestors died for nothing?

Strong statement from @RepEliotEngel and @LeaderHoyer on the politically-motivated dismissal by the White House of the US Ambassador to Ukraine foreignaffairs.house.gov/2019/5/engel-h...

"Ambassador Yovanovitch is a dedicated public servant and a diplomat of the highest caliber who has represented the United States under both Republican and Democratic administrations. The White House's outrageous decision to recall her is a political hit job and the latest in this Administration's campaign against career State Department personnel. It's clear that this decision was politically motivated, as allies of President Trump had joined foreign actors in lobbying for the Ambassador's dismissal.

By recalling Ambassador Yovanovitch just mere months before her tenure in Ukraine was set to end, the Administration is harming American interests and undermining American diplomacy. We call on the Administration to reverse this decision immediately. In this period of transition, Ukraine needs gifted professionals like Ambassador Yovanovitch more than ever."

So, as usual, we're seeing Russia weaponize preexisting fissures in our society, not create new ones. This dataset seems to use mostly right-leaning issues, but I'm sure there is some content on the left in the Syria and BLM accounts that didn't show up in the top 100 terms. (9/)

Shocking to see some of the countries that supported Russia's re-entry into the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe. Especially given what's happening in Georgia, the international community can't allow Russia to launder legitimacy through international fora

A word of caution to media and other interested parties:

There are lots of reports of violations coming in from party observers. Better to wait for the reports from missions with systematic, wide coverage and no political motivation before drawing conclusions on voting process.

Obviously this film is important for its correlation to Trump's attacks on the press today.

But what really struck me was Kay Graham and her bravery despite the odds.

3:09 PM · 28 Dec 2017

Nina Jankowicz @wiczpedia · 28 Dec 2017

In nearly every scene, she is being suffocated by men trying to influence her, who think nothing of her capability or her position.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczpedia · 28 Dec 2017

In the context of the reckoning women have brought to bear in public life recently, it was all the more meaningful to watch Kay lead a group of men out of the Supreme Court (having eschewed a public statement—"we've said our piece") through a crowd of women.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczpedia · 28 Dec 2017

As someone who finds herself one of few women in the room on a regular basis, I am indebted to those who came before me. Cheers to you.

And on top of that, the film is beautifully shot, beautifully scripted, and beautifully acted. Go see it.

One final striking thing, before I sign off and hope that Trump doesn't give back Alaska while I'm here:

Trump said he told Putin that the Mueller investigation existed just to justify a democratic loss.

Music to Putin's ears. We can only imagine what else he said.

So again, what's the solution here? A blanket ban on all bots? No- some bots are used for good, as I heard the very smart [illegible] point out this week. This piece is big on paranoia and light on solutions.

No kidding? I like them a lot for image collages, do they work well for text heavy but illustrated with figures?

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia 25 Apr 2018

I think if you're importing HQ images for figures should work fine (though you can get pretty granular with detail in the native editor I think). I've done some presentations and things like invitations on there to great success!

How do you "amplify & exacerbate existing fissures in society" with a few thousand tweets dropped into a sea of 500 million tweets a day?
Don't you find it alarming that 54% of Americans including 82% of Dems believe a 90 person troll farm affected the outcome of the election?

Also struck by this, at the end of today's @washingtonpost bombshell on Trump's Russia sensitivities:

washingtonpost.com/classic-apps/d...

"I believe that what he wants is to settle the issue, he wants a better, more constructive U.S.-Russia relationship," Volker said. "I think he would like [the Ukraine conflict] to be solved . . . get this fixed so we can get to a better place."

The conversation was about Ukraine but seemed to capture Trump's frustration on so many Russia-related fronts — the election, the investigations, the complications that had undermined his relationship with Putin.

Volker said that the president repeated a single phrase at least five times, saying, "I want peace."

Ukraine is not a bargaining chip

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 14 Dec 2017

Trump may say he wants peace, but his lack of movement on issues related to Ukraine belies a desire to save them for when they'll be most useful to him & his relationship with Russia.

For my followers who don't follow Ukraine in detail, since the beginning of the war in Donbas, Russia has taken over 100 Ukrainians as political prisoners. Drawing attention to the indignities they've suffered and returning them home has been a huge priority for Kyiv.

A word of advice to other Western reporters on Ukraine: if you would only consider Ukrainian media that is in Russian because you don't know Ukrainian/think that Russian is enough - it's not. You'd only get one side of stories this way

Getting the government to recognize their complicity in my dad's multiple myeloma diagnosis so he could receive VA care and benefits was extremely difficult. We were lucky the VA and veterans organizations like those in the story came through.

If the government told my dad (& millions of others) he might have been at risk, rather than conceding his disease was a result of his service after the fact, he might have caught his cancer much earlier.

He might have seen me graduate from college. Been at my wedding.

Unsurprisingly this post about Twitter's media literacy efforts is really scant on details- how much did they spend? how many kids (or others?) were trained?

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 19 Jan 2018

These are basic details that any NGO receiving USG funds would be required to report. (I know. I used to work for one, and I had the great job of being the one who wrote the reports to "demonstrate impact.")

Sure, tech giants are independent, but they should share this information, given the outsize influence they have over our information space, and especially before they claim they're making a good faith effort to solve the problem.

FB has announced two initiatives that seemingly support the development of local news on its platform:

It is bumping local news on your feeds: newsroom.fb.com/news/2018/01/n...

and helping local publishers game the FB algorithm to get more subscribers: techcrunch.com/2018/02/27/fac...

I'm glad to see this emphasis on local news, but I'm not sure this is the right emphasis. I'd rather see an investment in the good work outlets are already doing: free ads for small outlets, grants for local reporters, etc

1 (reply) · (retweet) · (like)

Nina Jankowicz ✓ @wiczipedia · 2 Mar 2018
In particular, the local news accelerator feels like a master class in "how to write a headline that will give you an algorithm bump." We already deal with enough sensationalist clickbait contributing to mis- and dis-information.

If you have to give a class on how to use your platform to an entire industry maybe it's the platform that's broken, not those trying to use it for the public good.

It doesn't really matter how many times you say it if you don't understand that Russian disinformation & domestic disinformation actors are often one and the same & on the same side

Having spent countless hrs looking at these accts, I can say that while their narratives overlap Russia's (remember, the Kremlin exploits pre-existing fissures), these are homegrown accts w/ no connection to Russia. It's important to know these operations exist outside of RU.

Apparently it is #NationalCatDay. Jake doesn't get along with cats, so I don't have one currently, but in honor of the occasion I present to you my childhood best friend (and yes, me as a very blonde toddler): Huggles!

Huggles was a large cat to begin with, and then she became quite fat because my siblings used to feed her the leftover milk from their morning cereal. She sometimes purred so loudly while sitting on the couch that my dad yelled at her for obstructing the sound of the TV.

Interesting question: do accusations of sexual assault advance the narrative that the mainstream media is "fake?"

(Only if you have selective judgement. Which the people ascribing to this narrative do.)

Important to underscore in this news that penetrating and probing =/= changing tallies. Still extremely disturbing, but we need to be really precise about language (esp in headlines and ledes) so people understand exactly what did and did not happen.

Extremely worrying. For decades, Ukraine has enjoyed bipartisan support and developed relations with both parties based on trust, respect and non-interference. Now an American official is trying to basically force Ukraine to interfere on one of the sides of the future elections.

All this is a long way of saying I'm going to be engaging a little less. It's not because I don't want to. It's also not because I'm scared of your "theory." It's because if you can't see the humanity in me then I am not going to spend my emotional energy on you

Good morning everyone, and thanks so much for the messages of support! I really appreciate it.

Also want to say that what I've experienced is only the tip of the iceberg in terms of harassment. People (women in particular) w/ bigger profiles get far worse. Support them too. ❤️

This Video is an interesting prelude to what the Zelensky admin comms strategy might look like. So is the palace intrigue surrounding the absence of Patriarch Epifany.

Oleksiy Kuzmenko @kooleksiy

Zelenskiy publishes a video message from religious leaders to Donbas and Crimea: calling for peace, forgiveness, dialogue. Missing from the vid is Epifaniy, head of independent Orthodox Church. Zelenskiy on FB

Does anyone out there have advice on the ideal structure and length of a book proposal (specifically for a memoir)? Is there any recommended literature on this? [illegible]

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 9 Aug 2019

It really depends on the book! I found lots of helpful reference materials online. But basically you should have overview, marketing plan, chapter outline, sample chapter. Mine was ~75pp total

My takes from the debate:
1. Zelensky can speak Ukrainian after all, almost as well as Poroshenko
2. Poroshenko can command a crowd, almost as well as Zelensky
3. Stadium debates should be a tradition
4. There should be a series of meaningful TV studio debates before those.

I'd imagine an independent survey of voters who had consumed RT or Sputnik content, how much, how they got it, were they undecided, and did they end up voting Trump/Brexit? Then a control of swing voters? Not perfect, but at least an attempt to quantify the "unquantifiable."

4 · · 4

David M. Herszenhorn @herszenhorn · 17 Nov 2019

Not sure there is any real way to do this from a sociological standpoint, largely b/c direct RT/Sputnik consumption seems not the sole metric. In US for sure stuff gets picked up & amplified by rightwing/conspiracy radio/tv. So not just cigarettes sold, but also 2d-hand smoke

The only 'pressure' here will be the propaganda value of the law. RT cannot be forced out & FARA does nothing toward that, tho RT can claim anything. But let's not get ahead of ourselves and suddenly attribute the Duma with wise & strategic lawmaking prowess.

In 2016, I published this piece on Trump's inaccurate, destructive view of NATO.

Never did I think that 2 years later its arguments would still be actual, but as Trump lectures our allies about defense spending thresholds, it's clear nothing has changed.

What's shocking about it? Wouldn't you expect that the UK had a greater diplomatic response than the US and it's a surprising result it didn't?
Is it unreasonable for the US to have a position this is a European matter?

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia

Replying to @outsh1ned

It was a proportional response- what's shocking is that trump doesn't understand that and doesn't want to appear to be leading a charge against Putin. And no, this was not a European matter- it was an infringement on the international order.

7:16 PM · 15 Apr 2018

His complaint is literally proportionality & hard to argue with.
Meanwhile the international order is in no way impacted by these two being injured/killed. Certainly no more than and of the various reporters killed this year, Myanmar, etc

> Trump was furious as news reports described the expulsions as the largest purge in U.S. history and noted the wide gap between the United States and its allies. "If you had told me France and Germany were only doing [four], that's what we would have done," one official recalled him saying.

What's disturbing about this behavior isn't only the affect it has on the US information ecosystem, but the downstream affects it has on countries that have much more fragile media environments, much less stable democracies

Over the past few years, as I interviewed officials across Europe, it became clear that the tacit approval telegraphed in tweets like the one above meant it was ok for democratic leaders to disregard the truth & denigrate the very systems on which our democracy is built.

And in countries where the rule of law is more fragile, it leads to the the idea that harassment, imprisonment and murder of media workers is fine because they are "fake news". It's dragging down press freedom worldwide.

Since the US now qualifies as a "fragile democracy" in many ways while simultaneously remaining a "world leader", the problem both in US and elsewhere is even graver

NAACP wants removal of Confederate generals from Stone Mountain

Three days after the Confederate battle flag was ceremonially removed from the South Carolina Statehouse grounds in Columbia Atlanta chapter of the NAACP officially called for the removal of Stone Mountain s iconic Confederate Memorial carving.

According to WSB-TV in Atlanta, the organization calls for the removal of all symbols of the Confederacy from the park, as well as any other state-owned buildings, parks and lands

The USA is out of balance now We loose our history The gays, lesbians and trans-sexuals have more rights now then other folks They bring pervert culture in our houses as something normal Today LGBT community has turned into the head and everyone else is the tail.

We inherit the history we make it and we are fated to become part of it What kind of inheritage next generation will get? The rainbow flag that is offensive and a symbol of hate Instead of delete a big part of our history can we ban the rainbow from public display?

Equating Russia's interference in our democratic process to an investigation adhering to the rules and norms of our government is not only misguided, it has frightening implications for the electoral process.

Will Trump contest democratic wins with "meddling" as his grounds?

locutor Putin has ever had is something more fundamental: namely, Trump's zero-sum, utterly transactional view of politics. The primacy of interests over values—or rather, a rejection of the idea that the former might have some relevance for the latter—mirrors Putin's own view of the world. Klimov told me that previous U.S. Presidents, particularly Obama, were driven by a belief in the "universal virtue of the American system" and the notion that "the more states around the world that accept and follow this system, the better."

Ideals (& by extension, democracy support) are part of American identity, not a means to an end, writes @Malinowski washingtonpost.com/news/democracy …

Should we have refrained from supporting democracy in Russia? I'm not sure we could have. As hard as it is for Putin to imagine, ideals are part of America's identity; even if we'd tried to stay silent, he would eventually have done something U.S. leaders would have felt compelled to condemn. Even under Trump, the U.S. Congress will keep funding human-rights activists from Russia and around the world, and the U.S. justice system will keep prosecuting Russian corruption. These things are in our laws and part of our national DNA.

These firsthand experiences and observations have led me to a conclusion that may surprise you: even if the United States Government were to acknowledge the threat posed by Russian influence campaigns today in no uncertain terms, and we were to walk out of the hearing room and secure beyond a shadow of a doubt the country's election infrastructure, even if we hermetically sealed our information environment from inauthentic users and false or misleading information, and if social media companies finally put forth a good faith effort to put users and the security of our democracy first, even then, we would still not successfully dispel the threat our democracy faces from foreign actors' political influence operations.

There is no one and done solution. This will not be easy.

Above all, we need nuance, debate, discussion, particularly in this political environment.

Thanks, Dean, for this great survey of the research and nudge toward a more expansive discussion.

If I were rooting out these accounts at Facebook, I would start this effort by looking for pages connected to employees of Sputnik, RT, and other state-run news orgs. Apparently that didn't occur to FB until ... recently?

(Another note that belies Facebook's lack of understanding of this issue: in their release, they refer to Sputnik as "a news agency based in Moscow." 🤦)

Twitter since it only had 4,123 followers, but it masqueraded as a pro-Trump political account.

Shorte.st was the most commonly used link shortening service by this account, and the payout rates advertised on shorte.st indicate that a user can make US$14.04 per 1,000 clicks by users in the U.S.

Given that this account had 4,123 followers, it is possible this account generated an income of $56.16 per tweet. It tweeted 16,914 times, meaning the account may have generated an income of almost $1 million if each of its followers clicked on a link just once ($949,890). The account was also retweeted 8,362 times which may have resulted in even more clicked links.

None of the 12 other accounts who used monetized link shorteners were as prolific, sending between one and 1,192

6 64 106

Craig Silverman @CraigSilverman · 5 Jun 2019

Symantec used a really high and questionable CPM and did not apply standard link click/conversion rates. This figure has been cited by NBC News and Politico so far. It's pure fantasy. There is no way an account with 4k followers earned anywhere close to $1m from URL shorteners!!

That was a long night. Here's what I'm hoping we hear more of tomorrow:

1:43 PM - 10 Apr 2018

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia 10 Apr 2018

More on bad actors' interference in our civil discourse. I was hoping #Zuckerberg would shed some more light on #Facebook's about face regarding the role Russian disinformation played in shifting the discourse surrounding the 2016 election

#TechHearings #ZuckHearings #AskZuck

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia 10 Apr 2018

#Zuckerberg said "we are responsible for content." But when AI and users fail to identify problematic content, what will #Facebook do? And will the definitions of what is problematic be public and easily accessible?

#TechHearings #ZuckHearings #AskZuck

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia 10 Apr 2018

Very little time spent on #Facebook's double standard at home and abroad. #Zuckerberg claims to be a defender of democratic freedoms, and yet routinely complies with requests from authoritarian governments to remove or block certain content. What is the true Facebook ethos?

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia 10 Apr 2018

Zuck only paid lip service to "news literacy." It's more than just a buzzword, and I was shocked that he didn't have a prepared response detailing Facebook's investments in this area/its importance. How can FB build these skills?

This doesn't stop Alex Jones' economic incentive, which is boner pills and not ad revenue.

It doesn't stop the economic incentive of a Bitcoin pump-and-dump fake news driver.

It fixes a kind of fake news that went away naturally in December of 2016.

1 2 11

Ben Collins @oneunderscore 2 Feb 2018

I mean this seriously: Twitter and Facebook are not thinking hard enough, not trying hard enough, or they are allowing disinformation to flourish on their platform for several economic or cultural reasons that benefit them.

At this point, there's no other explanation.

Finally, we often talk about "preserving the public square" when we discuss speech issues on social platforms. But the truth is that no one would have the balls to say half of what they say on Twitter to the face of those they attack.

1 3 12

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 7 Aug 2018
(Aside: It's true that social media has given voice to the voiceless in our society; more minorities and women have a platform because of it. That paradigm is worth preserving. But we also receive the brunt of the abuse.)

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 7 Aug 2018
No, Twitter should not fact check every tweet. But when well-known, easily researched cases like that of Alex Jones and Infowars arise, in which parents whose children were murdered in cold blood are not only targeted, but prevented from visiting their children's graves.

Good study, but the HOW starts with the will to act and succeed. That's more than "define a clear mission and goals" and cannot be merely implied. It is overlooked in your "obstacles" sections, such as with EEAS. The will is the fundamental & most critical req.

No I said product: this branding has been on all their campaign materials. The line is thin between the tv program and real life but the voters I have spoken to seem to get it 🤷‍♀️ what's more concerning is the creation of fake campaign materials

So far in Macedonia, pre-referendum:

Everyone I've spoken with understands that fact-checking in and of itself is not a solution to disinformation, nor is a simple counter narrative. Lots of focus on building resilience (ie media literacy and critical thinking).

United States to further polarize society

Sergei S. @vsyo · 22 Jan 2018

The outsiders can do nothing to the US, unless they use an A-bomb. The trust erosion is due to the fallout from an anti-Trump war that has been waged by the US elites and their institutions (incl., media).

...Has that White House invite been rescinded?

- Putin's not going to sit idly by as the U.S. expands attacks against Assad — though as long as Russians on the ground aren't directly threatened (the Kremlin's stated "red line"), he's not likely to take direct action to retaliate.

Gets into a whole debate about "trust" and how/why people trust their news sources—much of which is spread by friends in their "trust" network. How does a journalist break into that trust network? Does sharing other things on social media make a reporter more/less credible?

Then and now, I wait for evidence before drawing conclusions. Moreover, that's not the focus of my work at all; a holistic, depoliticized response to disinformation is. Anyone who feels like reading my work can discern that, if they choose to.

These ads have already been seen by millions of eyeballs. They aren't secret or sensitive.

The least we can do is let the population draw its own conclusions. Anything less would not be fully transparent.

(Not to mention way less transparent than the release of actually classified and sensitive data contained in Sec. Clinton's emails.) /end

FB has started to give users more info on pages, but you have to know where to look for it. (Recall: most users only interact with their newsfeeds and rarely wander off it.) This info is buried just barely "above the fold" on a page's TL & requires a click on "about." (2/)

25 years ago as Estonia's ambassador to the US, I would go to the Russian embassy on this day and politely ask: "Independence from what?"(Estonians are always polite). I never got an answer. Given the adulation given to Stalin these days, it was a rather stupid question meaning artificially amplified and targeted for a specific purpose — and it dominated political discussions in the United States for days. The #releasethememo campaign came out of nowhere. Its movement from social media to fringe/far-right media to mainstream media so swift that both the speed and the story itself became impossible to ignore. The frenzy of activity spurred lawmakers and the White House to release the Nunes memo, which critics say is a purposeful misrepresentation of classified intelligence meant to discredit the Russia probe and protect the president.

My biggest problem with this type of approach (as you all well know) is the total lack of attention to the societal fissures that make this divisive messaging resonant in the first place. Even if we cut this one head off, it will grow back somewhere else.

The election ended at 21h, so counting started immediately after that. We (in my area, over 800 votes) were done shortly after midnight see a boost in readership, while less known organizations or start-ups receiving poor ratings could see their web traffic decline significantly on the social network. The company's changes include an effort to boost the content of local news outlets, which have suffered sizable subscription and readership declines as news consumption migrated online.

I have argued, and will continue to, that tech should be an equalizing force and make algorithmic changes that allow smaller outlets to compete with media giants that might have more widespread "trust."

Small/local outlets are the ones doing stories that can bridge the trust gap between people on diff sides of the political spectrum, country, etc. Reinforcing the status of (existing, distrusted) media giants won't do that.

When I encounter "strong, independent women" they earn respect. When I encounter self-serving, self-promoting women, there is no respect, those women only weaken the position of honest women who actually supplied the work to rise above.

Jokes aside, the puppy pics tactic is similar to what RT/Sputnik used (disaster videos) to grow YouTube following.

> The goal of the dog lovers' page was more obscure. But some analysts suggested a possible motive: to build a large following before gradually introducing political content. Without viewing the entire feed from the page, now closed by Facebook, it is impossible to say whether the Russian operators tried such tactics.

By using Twitter's services you agree to ... ation, and ads.

the media is declining as technology platforms elevate clickbait, rumor and propaganda over real journalism, and politicians jockey for advantage by inflaming suspicion of the press. Growing polarization is jeopardizing even the foundational assumption of common truths, the stuff that binds a society together.

It's funny that you trust POTUS's categorization of "the fake news." ▯▯▯

PS, NYT subscriptions grew 60% this year. Seems like they're really on the way out.

$420k fine for a Polish TV channel that covered anti govt protests.

@anneapplebaum asks: how will USG respond, given the Trump admin's relationship with the media?
